

Gynaikes, Mulieres: Mujeres, Dones, Emakumeak, Mulleres de Grecia y Roma (FCT-21-16887)
Rome	Autorship: Pilar Pavón Torrejón Republic/Early Roman Empire Field: marriage, politics, education Ti. Gracchus anguibus domi suae mare <ac></ac>	When Ti. Gracchus caught two snakes in his femina deprehensis, certior factus ab aruspice	own house, a male and female, he was told by mare dimisso uxori eius, femina ipsi celerem	the soothsayer, that if he let go the male, it obitum instare, salutarem coniugi potius quam	portended the death of his wife; but that if he sibi partem augurii secutus marem necari,	let go the female, he himself would suddenly feminam dimitti iussit sustinuitque in	die. Following that part of the prediction that conspectu suo se ipsum interitu serpentis	portended his own death, rather than the occidi. itaque Corneliam nescio utrum	death of his wife, he caused the female snake feliciorem dixerim, quod talem uirum	to be released; and was so resolute as to watch habuerit, an miseriorem, quod amiserit.	his own destruction when the snake was killed in his presence. And therefore I cannot Valerius Maximus, Facorum et dictorum	determine whether Cornelia was more happy memorabilium libri novem, Liber IV, VI, 1.	that she had such a husband, or more http://www.thelatinlibrary.com/valmax4.html	miserable in his loss.
	Valerius Maximus, Memorable Deeds and Sayings. 6.1. Translated by S. Speed.